THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1915.

An Evening Echo.

The eyes of other people are the eyes that ruin us. If but myself were blind I should never want a fine house nor fine furniture.—DR. FRANKLIN.

Wilson's Ghost.

The president's speech to the Pan-American made it clear that the ship purchase bill remains in his program. It is equally clear that the country is in favor of the purchase of the ship.

Regular and efficient lines of communication with the South Americans are, of course, desirable, and there are various means of accomplishing this end. Postal subsidies are the devices most in favor with other maritime nations. They involve less risk and produce better results than government ownership.

Appointing Relatives.

Congressman Lawrence Casey, of Pennsylvania, makes public announcement that he will recommend the appointment of his brother as postmaster of Wilkes-Barre, and concludes his defense by saying "he is the best brother that ever lived."

"This is no time to talk politics," shout Democratic leaders who desire to use the foreign situation to evade discussion of bad legislation and worse administration. Then these same leaders proceed to send a circular letter to local party managers asking for a report on public sentiment toward President Wilson and his policies.

Big Deficit.

Though aided by receipts from income and stamp taxes, the balance in the federal treasury at the close of business for the week ending June 5, was only $16,457,498.70 as compared with a balance of $136,861,995.94 on the same date two years ago, when Republican revenue laws and Republican appropriations were in control of federal finances.

Thrill for the Young.

"Thrill is one of the cornerstones on which manhood must be constructed," Henry Ford, of Detroit. It is a fact well known to wise parents and teachers that the best way to learn is by doing. During the coming school vacation, let your children do a little work and earn a little money.

They will then appreciate better the value of money and the importance of saving part of every dollar earned.

A young boy who sells Saturday Evening Posts was asked by his sister for a loan of fifteen cents. He had some doubts about the prompt return of such a loan, so he said: "No, Mary, I don't want to let you have that money. It took me an hour yesterday to earn fifteen cents selling Posts and I'm going to hang on to it for a while."

There are many ways in which ambitious boys can make money. A city boy can run errands, deliver things with his hand and legpower or express wagon, caddy on a golf course, etc.

A country boy or girl can earn money by planting and tending a garden, or caring for animals. A young girl in North Dakota made over $50 from a litter of pigs which her sensible parents turned over to her to look after.

Girls, in city or country, can help with the housework, do sewing, make candy and in many other ways make themselves useful as well as ornamental.

In every case, when a child earns money he or she should be encouraged to put some of it into a savings account. This will firmly establish the habit of saving.

The Boy Scouts of America have a thrift plank in their platform. Following their annual custom the F. B. Silverwood stores of Los Angeles opened 700 savings accounts at the Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank recently. These accounts were opened in the names of worthy newsboys and other youngsters of the city.

The children of Los Angeles under the age of sixteen years, 40,000 in number, have on deposit in the school savings bank close to $1,000,000, almost $25 each. This good record is ascribed to the instruction given in the business department of the schools.

Among the many other good things that the Young Men's Christian Association is doing, it is co-operating with the American Banking Association in the effort to increase the sum total of thrifty living in this country.

A recent number of the 40-page monthly magazine Association Men, was devoted almost entirely to the subject of thrift, containing articles by James J. Hill, Henry Ford, George W. Perkins and others. The front cover was ornamented with a picture of enlisted men of the navy depositing their savings for safe keeping with the Brooklyn Navy Young Men's Christian Association, where over $400,000 has been deposited by men of the service in the last thirteen years.

Ask your own Young Men's Christian Association secretary for the free personal expense record and the "Thrifty Tips." They will help you.

Politics, Not Business.

Doubtless the European war had some part in producing the six and a half million dollar deficit in postal business, but there are some circumstances that point to other contributing causes. For instance, it seems to be one of the theories of this administration that practical experience is of minor value in determining fitness for responsible position in the postal service.

When Woodrow Wilson became president, one of his earliest responsibilities was that of choosing a postmaster general. The responsibility was great because the postal service is the most extensive and most complex feature of governmental operations and affects the business and personal interests of all the people. That department handles more than $200,000,000 a year in receipts and disbursements. Upon the efficiency of the service largely depends the prompt, convenient and satisfactory dispatch of private business.

The postal service is complex because it involves not merely the handling of mail in post offices, but the collection and delivery of mail in cities, collection and delivery of mail in rural routes, transportation by rail, bus, star routes and by steamboat, management of money order business and operation of the parcel post and postal savings bank. Scarcely any enterprise in the United States presents so many varied problems as does the postal service.

Wilson knew this. Did he endeavor to place at the head of the department a man already possessed of practical knowledge of postal affairs? Not at all. Of course he would appoint a Democrat. Quite properly he would seek for available men in Congress, though he might have found good men in the department.

There were seven Democrats on the senate committee on post offices and post roads and fourteen on the corresponding committee in the house. All these twenty-one men were familiar with postal affairs through their annual study of the post office appropriation bill and other bills affecting the postal service.

Not one of them was called to the head of the post office department. Neither did the selection go to a man of large experience in private business. The appointment went to a Texas congressman who began practicing law when he was 21, held position continuously as city and district attorney for eleven years and then went to Congress where he served fourteen years.

Inspection of the Congressional Record fails to show that Mr. Burleson ever served on the post office committee or took any part in the discussion of postal affairs. He was in no way identified with the enactment of the parcel post law—the most important development in the postal service in recent years. However, good a lawyer he may have been, he had no special fitness for the business management of so large and so complicated a public service as the post office department.

No private enterprise would have selected a manager in any such manner. If it did, it would certainly meet the fate the postal service has met in its financial accounts. No factory, construction company, or other large concern doing a business of $300,000,000 a year could succeed if such policies prevailed in the selection of a manager.

Undoubtedly Mr. Burleson was a good prosecuting attorney, and seven elections to Congress are strong evidence that he is a good politician. But his lack of special qualification for the position of postmaster general, together with his experience in politics, is not altogether reassuring to those American citizens who think there is more need for business management than for politics in the postal service.

TOKIO.

Tokio is perhaps the most civilized capital in the world. Although it has a population of over two million people, it is sprawled all over an area of 100 square miles, most of which has been reclaimed from the bay. For Tokio is nothing more than an aggregation of villages which has been slowly growing up, and spreading out since the sixteenth century.

Furthermore, each of these villages still retains its identity, and has its own shopping district where the people buy their food, and its town pump or hydrant, where many of them form their ablutions.

During the five centuries of its life, Tokio has been repeatedly burned, flooded and shaken to pieces by earthquakes, but has always risen from its ruins, sprawling rickety and formless as ever.

The imperial palaces are almost in the center of Tokio and are surrounded by wide grounds, which are perhaps the most attractive physical features of the city, for their banks are in some places a hundred feet high, covered with grass and twisted pine. But even these terraces have been cut and lowered to let through streets and trolley cars, and one car line is built on top of the bank.

The palace where the emperor and empress dwell is in the Japanese style and is not allowed to be sketched or photographed. That of the crown prince, on the other hand, is a splendid modern structure and may be visited by special permission. It is furnished with German furniture, its sliding doors are of plate glass, and in every respect it is modern and Occidental. It is not, however, occupied by the crown prince, who dwells in a native structure in another part of the city.

Most of the business traffic on the streets is by hand carts, and most of the passenger traffic besides that on the streets cars, is by means of the kuruma, or jin-rickisha. Horse carriages are few, and are heralded by a footman called a "bettō" who runs swiftly ahead of the equipage, and becomes highly indignant if you don't get out of the way fast enough to suit him. On the whole, Tokio is, to Occidental eyes, a dirty, shapeless and poorly lighted city, having little of the dainty charm for which Japan is famous.

THE DAILY NOVELETTE

NO WAITING.

Hemmersly Boffin lived according to a system. The system was, never to do anything until he was reminded by a sign.

Thus, on this particular Tuesday he needed a shave. In fact, he had needed one for three days, but as no barber sign had happened to fall in his way, his system demanded that he wait until one did.

Our story opens with Hemmersly Boffin in the act of being reminded by a sign that he needed a shave. The sign said:

"Four chairs. No waiting."

"My goodness, that reminds me! I need a shave!" thought Boffin, and dodged into a shop quickly so that no more of his friends would have a chance to see him with all that hair on his face.

He sank into the nearest chair and went to sleep.

When he awoke, feeling rather faint, he tried to ask the barber whether he was through and found he could not form any words. Some thing was missing from his mouth. He sank into the nearest chair and went to sleep.

"Sorry sir!" apologized the head dentist. "We are selling special false sets today, sir, for $35.00."

Hemmersly Boffin bought two sets, one for Sundays.

On an average a man consumes one ton of solid and liquid nourishment every year.

FLICKERLESS MOVIES.

Inventors are working toward the perfection of a moving picture machine which will substitute glass plates for films in the production of pictures. Several advantages are expected from this device. The gelatine film is not so transparent as glass and requires a stronger light to penetrate it. The flickering motion, so trying to the eyes, is chiefly due to the small holes along the edge of the film which allow it to be moved along by means of teeth. The action along the teeth and sockets, small as they are, causes eye fatigue by giving the picture an up and down motion.

A machine that is expected to prove practical has each picture on a glass slide set in a thin aluminum frame. Each frame has a knife-like projection at its upper and lower edges. The machine takes the frame by these projections, carries them from their box to the position of exposure and returns them to another box automatically. In this proper sequence a box having five cubic feet of space is sufficient to hold the slides for an exhibition lasting an hour.

OIL AND GAS

In Cabin Creek district, Kanawha county, W. Va., there are several important test wells drilling, but it will be some time before any will be due to get the sand. On Fishing Creek, Greene district, Wetzel county, Senator J. H. McDermott is drilling in the Big Injun sand at a somewhat important test on the Lindsay Burley farm. West Virginia is completing more work than any other state in the eastern fields, but it is located principally in the old, defined fields.

West of Big Injun, one and one-half miles, in Greenbrier district, Doddridge county, the Hope Natural Gas Company has drilled a test on the Gay Freeman farm through all sands and found nothing but a light gas pressure in the fifth sand. Greenbrier district has been furnishing, recently, more good producers than any other district.

In Smith's district, Roane county, the Ohio Fuel Oil Company has drilled a second test on the F. M. Summers farm through the Big Injun sand and has a very light pump-out. In the same district the same company has drilled its test on the J. F. Meadows farm, through the same formation, and has a light gas.

In the Weir sand development, in Elk district, Kanawha county, located on Blue creek, the Ohio Fuel Oil Company has completed No. 10 on the Edward Gebhart farm and it produced seven barrels the first twenty-four hours. In Duval district, Lincoln county, the United Fuel Gas Company has drilled No. 4 on the Horse Creek tract, through the Berea grit and has a show for a ten-

CLERKS

Are Sent Information by State Game Warden as to Hunters' Licenses.

(By J. A. Vines, state game warden.)

BELMONT, June 17.—To the fifty-five county clerks and the many thousands of sportsmen who are making complaint because licenses to hunt and fish have not been obtainable since the law became effective on May 27, I desire to make a brief statement so that all may know that my department is not to blame for this delay.

A requisition for these blanks was sent to the printing and stationery clerk at Charleston on the 20th day of April last, just ten days after the adjournment of the first extraordinary session of the legislature, which was as soon as data for same could be prepared.

Fearing that these licenses might not reach me in time to distribute to the several clerks before the law became effective on May 27, I made a special trip to Charleston for the purpose of mailing these blanks direct to the county clerks, reaching there on the morning of May 21, and was told by both the printing clerk and a representative of the Tribune Printing Company that these blanks were just about finished and that if I would stay in Charleston until Monday, May 24, that they would have same ready for shipment. Although I stayed there nearly a week and insisted that it was very important that these licenses be distributed I failed to get them, but was promised that they would be shipped to me by express within three or four days.

The first shipment of these licenses was received only a few days ago, and additional shipments are arriving almost every day, which are being forwarded to the county clerks the same day that they are received. I have sent several telegrams to the public printers and to the printing clerk inquiring as to the progress of this work, and am doing all possible to hurry up same.

The several kinds of licenses may be procured by making application to the county clerk of your county.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Suppose it is the name of a product. Or the name of a merchant or store.

And the name has been made known to you through newspaper advertising.

And service and goods have run true to the name.

Does that name mean something? Does it not inspire confidence and desire? Does not the name come instinctively to your mind when you have a desire to buy?
